Sometimes friends like to help. They offer advice on what you're cooking, discuss what you're watching on TV, and they might even offer to play a game with you. If those friends happen to be RagaMuffins, you can count on it.

"They want to be with you. They want to please you," says Laura Gregory, a Florida-based breeder and Cat Fanciers' Association (CFA) RagaMuffin breed committee chair. "If you're standing in the kitchen and you're making dinner, they'll tap on the side of your leg or your hip, and it's like, 'I'm right here, I need love.' You can't get more love and affection and bonding."
