

Take the Lead

Train your cat to walk with a harness and enjoy the outdoors together.

By Mary Anne Miller

Open the front door to many cat owners' homes, and they will usually rush to close it quickly behind you. It's an age-old tale: The innate drive tempting some cats outside challenges most owners' desire to keep their pets safely inside. Whenever a door opens, these cats attempt the five-second dash to freedom. A fun way to circumventing these sprinters, however, is to allow them to walk outside on your terms by training them to accept a harness and lead.

For the full article, pick up the January issue of CAT FANCY

Did you like this excerpt? Subscribe now to read more like it.