

Home Life

Cats can get upset when their favorite people are away.

By Sandy Robins

September is back-to-school month, and in many households, off-to-college month, too. That leaves parents with empty nests and the family pet wondering what's going on.

There's no question that cats don't like it when their people leave; it changes the household's dynamic and routine. Our cat Fudge mopes when my husband is away. She misses their daily special routine: He spreads his work papers on the kitchen counter and she scatters them. He grumbles, but secretly loves the attention she gives him.

Get the September 2009 issue of CAT FANCY to read the full article.