

Interest in RVing with Pets Rising

Recreational vehicles can be a solution for cat owners who want to take pets on vacations.

The endearing relationship between people and their pets can make it heartbreaking to leave them at home when the family goes on vacation. So what's a pet lover to do?

With only a limited number of hotels that accept pets as guests and the restrictions that airlines place on allowing them on board, RVs offer a solution. Woodalls Campground Directory lists more than 6,000 locations that welcome pets in the United States and Canada.

One in three of the United States eight million RV-owning families travels with their cats or other pets, according to a survey conducted by the Recreation Vehicle Industry Association.

Also, kennels can cost anywhere from $20 to $50 a day and be stressful for pets, but RVs eliminate the need for boarding.

That many times when you're moteling it with pets, it's difficult to find a place to walk them. In an RV, you're in a campground, and you just walk out your door, said Sue Bray, executive director of the Good Sam Club, an RV owners association.

Posted: July 31, 2006, 5 a.m. EST