

House Hearing on FDA Overhaul Postponed

The FDA Revitalization Act, a bill that would mandate fines on pet food companies that fail to report recalls quickly, is under consideration by a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee.

Posted: June 15, 2007, 5 a.m. EST

A House subcommittee postponed yesterday's hearing on the FDA Revitalization Act until next Tuesday, June 19.

In its current form, the FDA Revitalization Act, passed by the Senate this May, would establish an early-warning system for pet food recalls and animal illnesses, mandate fines for companies that fail to quickly report contaminated products, and, with the collaboration of pet industry players, write new federal standards for pet food ingredients, processing and labeling.

It also would legalize the sale of turtles under 4 inches, which was banned in 1975 over concerns of salmonella poisoning in children who might put the small animals in their mouths.

The Health Subcommittee of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce also canceled the mark-up sessions scheduled for today and tomorrow.

Members needed more time to review the legislation and to decide on any additional amendments, a committee aid said.

The subcommittee will review the FDA Revitalization Act at 10 a.m. in room 2123 of the Rayburn House Office Building. The full committee is scheduled to discuss it Thursday, June 21. The hearing will be available by webcast here.