New legislation in Illinois will include service animals and pets in disaster plans. The bill was introduced by state Rep. Art Tenhouse (R-93).

With the signing of the bill, Illinois becomes the 10th state to pass legislation that includes pets in disaster plans. Other states with similar laws include California, Florida, Hawaii, Louisiana, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York and Vermont. New Mexico passed a resolution that accounts for pets in times of emergency or disaster. Similar bills are pending in Virginia, Washington, Connecticut, Arizona and Texas.

Last October, President Bush signed federal legislation that considers pets in disaster plans. The Pets Evacuation and Transportation Standards (PETS) Act requires the inclusion of companion animals in disaster planning at the state and local levels and authorizes FEMA to assist with disaster plans for pets and service animals.
